The South African constitution declares that Parliament has the power to conduct oversight of all organs of state, including those at provincial and local government level. Is Parliament effective in its oversight role?

Professor Richard Calland testified before the Zondo Commission, referencing the Corder report on parliamentary oversight. Join a discussion on why the focus on parliamentary oversight is particularly important now as we continue to struggle with making sense of how far removed we are from the dreams and aspirations pre-1994; why they think parliament has failed in its duty; and possible ideas for reform.

Presented by:

Prof Richard Calland Political commentator and associate professor of Constitutional Law at UCT

Prof Hugh Corder
Professor Emeritus of the Department of Public Law
at UCT
