

POPIA AND INFORMATION OFFICERS

8 hours remote learning

Held over 4 days

THE COURSE AT A GLANCE

The Protection of Personal Information Act (POPIA) requires, among other things, the appointment of an information officer. This requirement is universally applicable to all types of organisations and has a far-reaching effect from a practical and compliance perspective.

This eight-hour course serves as a guide on the essential requirements and duties under POPIA with regards to appointing an information officer, as well as the practical implications of being appointed as such. The course aims to provide clarity on the role of an information officer in a public and private body.
